

When a host of sites received the Treo Pro last week, the various outlets were limited to unboxing ceremonies. It's expected that a flurry of Treo Pro reviews will hit this week, with Wired getting the jump on the festivities

The reviewer starts off by referencing the Treo 800w as "upcoming", a phone that's been available through Sprint for weeks. The reviewer took issue with the screen of the Treo Pro and found a lack of precision when using the touch screen. On the plus side, Wired found battery life to be excellent and the styling of the device to be "trim, light and pocketable".

Dumas went on to call the casing of the Treo Pro "slippery" and "retains more fingerprints than the NSA."

via Wired